Dear Rose, Paul, Catherine and Elsbeth,

Thank you for inviting us to the important Under Whittle again. My favourite part was going on the walk because we waked around and saw the trenches we excavated last time, when we were digging and I enjoyed that too! The interesting, but challenging part was the time line where you had to put all the artefacts in order in time, like the different families and their belongings. The people who lived there over the different centuries were called the Horobins, Slacks, Morsons and the Harrisons and I learnt that they lived at Under Whittle farm and they lived there for years and years, but leaving clues about how they lived for us to find in the future.

I was surprised to learn that the oxen made their own trail in the fields which looked like a circular path, then, they would return to the farm house. The trail that we went on wasa different to the oxen but we left no footprints or flattened grass. I found out that the cellar was used for dumping rubbish, but when the archeologicalgist came they cleared all the rubbish out and found Michael Morson's toys! I was surprised to find out he was Archie's uncle and he is still alive!

Love to come again.

From Winola.
